

FACT SHEET: PROPOSED PUBLIC CHARGE RULE CHANGE IS A BLACK ISSUE AND WE MUST FIGHT BACK

WHAT IS PUBLIC CHARGE

The public charge test is used by U.S. immigration officials to determine if a person is likely to become primarily dependent on the government for assistance.

Currently, the government considers someone a "public charge" if they receive cash benefits or need long-term care and is coupled with the totality of circumstances of the family adjusting to a new immigration status.

WHEN WOULD I UNDERGO THIS TEST?

If they succeed, the administration would use this test when considering applications for green cards or non-immigrant U.S. visas such as student visas, work visas, among others. They would have more reasons to refuse admission to the country or deny applicants. Individuals applying for CITIZENSHIP are not subject to this test.

WHO DOES NOT HAVE TO UNDERGO THE PUBLIC CHARGE TEST?

- Individuals applying for citizenship
- Individuals under consideration for TPS, DACA, VAWA, refugee or asylee status
- Children and other dependents of immigrants who are not applying for green card or adjusting their immigration status.

ARE THERE ANY POSITIVE FACTORS?

Having a job, being age 18 to 60, having private health insurance, and speaking the English language fluently, are all positive factors that can be weighed against negative factors.

Earning above 250% of the poverty level, which is about $62,000/year for a family of 4, is a heavily weighed positive factor that is more likely to overcome any other negative factor.

HOW IS THIS PROPOSED PUBLIC CHARGE RULE DIFFERENT? WHAT CHANGED?

Nothing has changed yet BUT the Trump administration has proposed re-defining public charge. Under a proposed public charge regulation change the Trump administration published on October 10, 2018, immigration officials would consider whether individuals had received or simply sought certain needs-based public services.
